What is a Preceptor? Preceptors are a valued component of the CSULB School of Social Work’s field education program. Some agencies may choose to use preceptors to help provide a broad learning experience for students. Preceptors are part of the agency's service-delivery team and can be individuals from disciplines other than social work. There are no degree requirements. Preceptors are selected to provide a specific learning experience or opportunity for the student. In this training, preceptors will receive information about the curriculum objectives for the students, the specific learning objectives that they will be providing to students, and a clear understanding of their participation in the evaluation process.
