I.
Listen, hear the silver bells!
Silver bells!
Hear the sledges with the bells,
How they charm our weary senses with a sweetness that compels,
In the ringing and the singing that of deep oblivion tells.
Hear them calling, calling, calling,
Rippling sounds of laughter, falling
On the icy midnight air:
And a promise they declare,
That beyond Illusion's cumber,
Births and lives beyond all number,
See, the stars bow down to hearken, what their melody foretells,
With a passion that compels,
And their dreaming is a gleaming that a perfumed air exhales,
And their thoughts are but a shining,
And a luminous divining
Of the singing and the ringing, that a dreamless peace foretells.

II.
Hear the mellow wedding bells,
Golden bells!
What a world of tender passion their melodious voice foretells!
Through the night their sound entrances,
Like a lover's yearning glances,
That arise
On a wave of tuneful rapture to the moon within the skies.
From the sounding cells upwinging
Flash the tones of joyous singing
Rising, falling, brightly calling; from a thousand happy throats
Roll the glowing, golden notes,
And an amber twilight gloats
While the tender vow is whispered that great happiness foretells,
To the rhyming and the chiming of the bells, the golden bells!

III.
Hear them, hear the brazen bells,
Here the loud alarum bells!
In their sobbing, in their throbbing what a tale of horror dwells!
How beseeching sounds their cry
'Neath the naked midnight sky,
Through the darkness wildly pleading
In affright,
Now approaching, now receding
Rings their message through the night.
And so fierce is their dismay
And the terror they portray
That the brazen domes are riven, and their tongues can only speak
In a tuneless, jangling wrangling as they shriek, and shriek, and shriek,
Till their frantic supplication
To the ruthless conflagration
Grows discordant, faint and weak.
But the fire sweeps on unheeding,
And in vain is all their pleading
With the flames!
From each window, roof and spire,
Leaping higher, higher, higher,
Every lambent tongue proclaims:
I shall soon,
Leaping higher, still aspire, till I reach the crescent moon;
Else I die of my desire in aspiring to the moon!
O despair, despair, despair,
That so feebly ye compare
With the blazing, raging horror, and the panic, and the glare,
That ye cannot turn the flames,
As your unavailing clang and clamour mournfully proclaims.
And in hopeless resignation
Man must yield his habitation
To the warring desolation!
Yet we know
By the booming and the clanging,
By the roaring and the twanging,
How the danger falls and rises like the tides that ebb and flow.
And the progress of the danger every ear distinctly tells
By the sinking and the swelling in the clamour of the bells.

IV.
Hear the tolling of the bells,
Mournful bells!
Bitter end to fruitless dreaming their stern monody foretells!
What a world of desolation in their iron utterance dwells!
And we tremble at our doom,
As we think upon the tomb,
Glad endeavor quenched for ever in the silence and the gloom.
With persistent iteration
They repeat their lamentation,
Till each muffled monotone
Seems a groan,
Heavy, moaning,
Their intoning,
Waxing sorrowful and deep,
Bears the message, that a brother passed away to the endless sleep.
Those relentless voices rolling
Seem to take a joy in tolling
For the sinner and the just
That their eyes be sealed in slumber, and their hearts be turned to dust
Where they lie beneath a stone.
But the spirit of the belfry is a somber fiend that dwells
In the shadow of the bells,
And he gibbers, and he yells,
As he knells, and knells, and knells,
Madly round the belfry reeling,
While the giant bells are pealing,
While the bells are fiercely thrilling,
Moaning forth the word of doom,
While those iron bells, unfeeling,
Through the void repeat the doom:
There is neither rest nor respite, save the quiet of the tomb!
Sergei Rachmaninoff composed his Choral Symphony The Bells in 1913, which was inspired by a Russian translation of four poems by Edgar Allen Poe. An anonymous admirer of his music submitted a Russian translation to Konstantin Balmont to Rachmaninoff in the hopes that he would set it to music. Tickled and a little intrigued, Rachmaninoff took on the task and composed a Symphony with the conventional four movements, scored for Soprano, Tenor, and Baritone Soloists, a mixed choir and large orchestra. Although this piece is not as well known as many of his piano works, it was one of Rachmaninoff’s personal favorites. The Bells is a secular work but it is also rooted in religion with the frequent use of the Gregorian Dies Irae theme, a chant for death. Rachmaninoff dedicated The Bells to the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam and its conductor of the time, Willem Mengelberg. The premiere took place in Russia on December 13, 1913.

The texts of Poe’s poems describe different aspects of human life such as birth, death, marriage, and terror symbolized by four different bells: Silver Bells, Golden Bells, Brazen Bells, and Iron Bells. Balmont with his loose translation, added extra words and altered complete stanzas, and is the actual model of The Bells. In Rachmaninoff’s work, the text, in Russian, and the music in each movement are attempting to evoke those four stages of human life. Aside from the third movement that is performed by orchestra and choir only, each soloist performs one movement.

Rachmaninoff was influenced by early 20th century Rome as well as another Russian composer: Tchaikovsky. He settled in Rome during the winter of 1912/1913 and worked on The Bells, inspired at the sight of the Piazza di Spagna. About composing The Bells he said that “In the drowsy quiet of a Roman afternoon, with Poe’s verses before me, I heard the bell voices, and tried to set down on paper their lovely tones that seemed to express the varying shades of human experience. And there was the added stimulus of working in the room where Tchaikovsky had worked, of writing on the table on which he had written.” It is known that Rachmaninoff admitted that the final slow movement of The Bells “had the precedent of Tchaikovsky’s Adagio lamentoso of his Pathétique Symphony.”

In the first movement, subtitled The Silver Sleigh Bells, the tenor soloist makes his appearance. Rachmaninoff is able to create great contrast in the music within this first movement. From upbeat and exciting he quickly moves to sadness. Known for his frequent use of the Dies Irae in his other works, we can find evidence of this in the second movement. In a movement subtitled The Mellow Wedding Bells we hear the soprano soloist representing the bride. The music should evoke the mere bliss of a new marriage, but nothing could be further from the truth. Rachmaninoff’s use of the Dies Irae theme suggests something darker. The dramatic vocal line sounds mournful and grim instead of celebratory, and we leave the movement with a feeling of discomfort.

The feeling of discomfort the audience experienced in the second movement continues in the third movement. The Loud Alarum Bells, is evoking fear and terror, and the fast tempo of the movement is therefore well chosen by Rachmaninoff. As the only movement without a soloist, the choir and orchestra engage in a loud extravaganza, creating a sense of chaos. The choir, easily overpowered by the dominant orchestra, is occasionally struggling to be heard. From the beginning to the end of the movement the listener is sitting on the edge of the seat, uncomfortable and, indeed, alarmed with a sense of terror.

Rachmaninoff was fascinated with the theme of death and he uses the first three movements to work up to the last one in which he almost creates a morbid obsession with death. In The Mournful Iron Bells the Dies Irae theme returns and is even more powerful. With all the instruments playing in their lowest registers and the striking Baritone solo, Rachmaninoff creates a grim and dark atmosphere. As Rachmaninoff stated, this movement is most closely associated with Tchaikovsky’s Pathétique Symphony. Rachmaninoff ends the work with a warm and rich sound, marking redemption, and the acceptance of death.

Influenced by bells and fascinated with death, Rachmaninoff is able to create a work of art in an effort to describe the stages of life through music and poetry. Perhaps the anonymous letter is what prompted him to compose this piece, but his youth and his love for Church bells is what made this work one of his favorite pieces he ever wrote. “If I have been at all successful in making bells vibrate with human emotion in my works, it is largely due to the fact that most of my life was lived amid vibrations of the bells of Moscow...”
Belshazzar's Feast

I.
Thus spake Isaiah—
Thy sons that thou shalt beget
They shall be taken away,
And be eunuchs
In the palace of the King of Babylon
Howl ye, howl ye, therefore:
For the day of the Lord is at hand!
By the waters of Babylon,
By the waters of Babylon
There we sat down: yea, we wept
And hanged our harps upon the willows.
For they that wasted us
Required of us mirth;
They that carried us away captive
Required of us a song.
Sing us one of the songs of Zion.
How shall we sing the Lord's song
In a strange land?

II.
If I forget thee, O Jerusalem,
Let my right hand forget her cunning.
If I do not remember thee,
Let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth.
Yea, if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.
By the waters of Babylon
There we sat down: yea, we wept.
O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed,
Happy shall he be that taketh thy children
And dasheth them against a stone,
For with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down
And shall be found no more at all.

III.
Babylon was a great city,
Her merchandise was of gold and silver,
Of precious stones, of pearls, of fine linen,
Of purple, silk and scarlet,
All manner vessels of ivory,
All manner vessels of most precious wood,
Of brass, iron and marble,
Cinnamon, odours and ointments,
Of frankincense, wine and oil,
Fine flour, wheat and beasts,
Sheep, horses, chariots, slaves
And the souls of men.

IV.
In Babylon, Belshazzar the King,
Made a great feast,
Made a feast to a thousand of his lords,
And drank wine before the thousand.
Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine,
Commanded us to bring the gold and silver vessels:
Yea! the golden vessels, which his father, Nebuchadnezzar,
Had taken out of the temple that was in Jerusalem.
He commanded us to bring the golden vessels
Of the temple of the house of God,
That the King, his Princes, his wives
And his concubines might drink therein.
Then the King commanded us:
Bring ye the cornet, flute, sackbut, psaltery
And all kinds of music: they drank wine again,
Yea, drank from the sacred vessels,
And then spake the King:

V.
Praise ye The God of Gold
Praise ye The God of Silver
Praise ye The God of Iron
Praise ye The God of Wood
Praise ye The God of Stone
Praise ye The God of Brass
Praise ye the Gods!

VI.
Thus in Babylon, the mighty city,
Belshazzar the King made a great feast,
Made a feast to a thousand of his lords
And drank wine before the thousand.
Belshazzar whiles he tasted the wine
Commanded us to bring the gold and silver vessels
That his Princes, his wives and his concubines
Might rejoice and drink therein.
After they had praised their strange gods,
The idols and the devils,
False gods who can neither see nor hear,
Called they for the timbrel and the pleasant harp
To extol the glory of the King.
Then they pledged the King before the people,
Crying, Thou, O King, art King of Kings:
O King, live for ever...
VII.
And in that same hour, as they feasted
Came forth fingers of a man's hand
And the King saw
The part of the hand that wrote.
And this was the writing that was written:
'MENE, MENE, TEKEL UPHARSIN'
'THOU ART WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE AND FOUND WANTING'.
In that night was Belshazzar the King slain
And his Kingdom divided.
Then sing aloud to God our strength:
Make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.
Take a psalm, bring hither the timbrel,
Blow up the trumpet in the new moon,
Blow up the trumpet in Zion
For Babylon the Great is fallen, fallen.
Alleluia!

VIII.
Then sing aloud to God our strength:
Make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob,
While the Kings of the Earth lament
And the merchants of the Earth
Weep, wail and rend their raiment.
They cry, Alas, Alas, that great city,
In one hour is her judgement come.

IX.
The trumpeters and pipers are silent,
And the harpers have ceased to harp,
And the light of a candle shall shine no more.

X.
Then sing aloud to God our strength.
Make a joyful noise to the God of Jacob.
For Babylon the Great is fallen.
Alleluia!

Sir William Walton is considered the third major English composer of the 20th Century after Ralph Vaughan Williams and Benjamin Britten. Born into a musical family, he became a chorister in the Christ Church Cathedral in Oxford as a young boy. He initially attended Oxford University to study music at age 16, but he was more interested in his own curriculum. In 1920, he decided to leave the institution without a degree. He moved in with the Sitwell family, an influential literary family, who encouraged him to explore his own musical identity. To make a living, he worked as a Jazz arranger and performer. The Sitwell family was the source of inspiration for his first compositions and he later collaborated with them. Slowly, Walton developed into a young and promising composer.
Belshazzar's Feast was commissioned by the BBC in 1930, and was intended for radio broadcast. Walton, eager to write his first major work, struggled with it, but worked on it with excitement. When he finished the piece it was significantly larger than the BBC intended. With its exceptionally large brass section, it was decided that it was too large for broadcasting. In October 1931 the London Symphony Orchestra premiered the piece on the Leeds Festival and it was a major success. The American premiere took place in Boston in March 1933, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Walton, who was 29 at the time, had already proven to be an upcoming composer with his Façade. His first attempt to compose an Oratorio was with Belshazzar's Feast, which was a major accomplishment for someone who had never written vocal music.

Belshazzar's Feast is an Oratorio that follows the tradition of the 18th century English Oratorio, as defined by G.F. Händel. He invented the Oratorio form and described it as a “dramatic musical work that is not staged or acted out.” Although it is characterized as an Oratorio, Walton himself rather thought of his work as a Choral Symphony. The piece is scored for only one Baritone soloist, mixed choir, and a large orchestra with brass bands placed on both side of the stage. Walton was very much influenced by 20th century composers. Considering his Jazz background, the syncopated rhythms and the addition of the unusual saxophone to the orchestration suggest influences of Jazz as well. The libretto, written by Osbert Sitwell, depicts the story of King Belshazzar of Babylon and the Jews who were held in captivity. The text is taken from the Old Testament, primarily from chapter V of the Book of Daniel, but we also find texts from the Books of Isaiah and Revelations. Sitwell claimed that the libretto “is almost wholly taken from the Bible, with added words in order to assist the music and poetic flow.” This story was chosen because of its familiarity, which was important considering many people would hear it on the radio. The work has 10 movements that are divided into 3 main sections: 1) The prediction and coming to pass of Israel's subjugation; 2) Belshazzar's feast and the fall of Babylon; and 3) A song of praise to God.

The first section begins with an outburst from a trombone followed by the chorus. The chorus represents the Jews and, reciting a text from Isaiah, announces the end of the Babylonian Empire in a defiant mood.

The second section is considered the most important part, and revolves around King Belshazzar’s banquet “for a thousand of his lords.” The King uses sacred Jewish vessels in a disrespectful manner, and the Jews are outraged. After this provocative act, a message suddenly appears on the walls: “Mene, mene, tekel upharsin” which translates into “Thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting.” Daniel was certain that this message was an indication of the end of Babylon and claimed it to be both a premonition of the end of the Babylonian Empire, and the end of Jewish slavery and oppression.

The final section is dominated by a celebration, which indicates that the Empire has fallen. The piece is concluded with Jews celebrating and rejoicing the end of the Babylonian Empire with songs of praise to God.

Belshazzar's Feast is generally regarded as Sir William Walton's compositional highlight. With the successful adaptation of this Biblical story, he proved to be an exceptional composer. In the 30-minute Oratorio, the audience is taken on the journey of the 4000 Jews who were once exiled to Babylon. We feel their sorrows, their anger, and pain but we also feel their rejoicing moments of freedom. Musically, we witness the culmination of excitement, great passion, and immense talent. Walton is able to do what many aspire but only a few actually achieve: creating a masterpiece.
