PROGRAM NOTES

The Duke of Marlborough Fanfare, originally written in March of 1939, is based on an English folk tune sung by Mr. Henry Burstow, collected by Lucy Broadwood. Percy Aldridge Grainger is an Australian composer who was quite fond of collecting English folk tunes. Having been influenced by the practices of Lucy Broadwood, Grainger would take his Edison recording device out into the countryside to record these songs for preservation purposes. Grainger not only wrote a fanfare, but he also uses The Duke of Marlborough in the first movement of his most famous piece for wind band, Lincolnshire Posy.

Symphonies of Wind Instruments
This piece was completed in 1920 and is an odd piece in the oeuvre of Igor Stravinsky. Dedicated ‘To the memory of Claude Achille Debussy’, the first sketches of Symphonies of Wind Instruments appear between 1918 and 1919 after the death Debussy, who was his close friend. Stravinsky, along with Ravel, De Falla, Bartók, and Roussel, had been asked to contribute a piece to the new music journal, La Revue musicale, in memory of Claude Debussy. While the other composers had written pieces in imitation of Debussy’s impressionistic style, Stravinsky wrote an ‘austere’ chorale titled Fragment des Symphonies pour instruments à vent à la mémoire de C. A. Debussy.

The instrumentation of the piece is for an extended orchestral wind section without strings and had been adopted into the wind band repertoire following the creation of the Eastman Wind Ensemble in 1952. The title can be somewhat confusing, but one must go to the ancient definition of symphonie, meaning, “a group of instruments sounding together.” With this in mind the listener can now discern it from what we know a ‘symphony’ to be today. In Stravinsky’s mind, each section of homogenous sounding instruments (i.e. flutes, clarinets, double reeds, trumpets, etc.) is a symphonie. These symphonies make up the four different episodes of the piece. With excerpts of the chorale interspersed within these episodes the listener will hear a piece in a form all its own.

The 1920 version was premiered by the famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky. Stravinsky was not very happy with this performance and it was one of the reasons why he began to conduct his own music. The work went under the ownership of a couple of different publishers and Stravinsky himself had lost some of his later proofs. He decided to make a new version from his first proof and a piano reduction. The new 1947 version came with changes in instrumentation and phrase length. Malcolm McDonald says of the two versions, “...the original version is the more redolent of the liturgy and Russian orthodox church music; the revised version is more abstract, more a Cubist play of colors and planes.”

was commissioned for the retirement concert of Eric Haenfler, band director at Highland High School in Gilbert, Arizona. The work consists of three movements, all of which draw from various types of pop music and dance forms set within a contemporary framework. The first movement, Overture, is a short fanfare based loosely on Irish dance rhythms and melodies. While there are no specific references to any Irish folk songs, one hears the style that is often found in Irish jigs.

The second movement, Ballad, is lyrical in nature and receives its inspiration from various aspects of pop ballads, particularly some of the harmonic progressions. Opening with more contemporary harmonies, the ensemble soon establishes a phrase that undergoes several harmonic, rhythmic and melodic transformations as it moves toward the climax of the movement. While no direct references to pop music are made one hears some distant references as the movement progresses.

The final movement, Fusion, is a literal combination of several styles, inspired by my love of many different types of music, including rock, funk, and swing. Elements of all these styles exist in this movement, treated in a contemporary fashion. The opening chord sets the mood for the entire movement, which references them (or variations of them) at least once during each style change, almost as a link among various sections of the piece. Eventually, a brief reference to material from the first movement leads into the final powerful rhythmic statements, which are variations on the opening material of the final movement. A stubborn and strong bass pedal continues to interject before the various intertwining lines come together in a final chord.

—Brian Balmages
Cajun Folk Songs II

Both Cajun Folk Songs II and my earlier composition for concert band, Cajun Folk Songs, are inspired by folk melodies whose precise origins are unknown. In Cajun Folk Songs II the folk melodies are more freely combined with original music.

The introductory section of “Ballad” is a deeply personal movement of reflection – a brass chorale based on original material. We next hear two different settings of the same folksong, Aux Natchitoches. (Pronounced Nah-kee-TOSH in French, but Na-keh-tush by most present day Louisianans.)

The outer sections of the second movement, “Country Dance,” are built mainly on original music that evokes the energetic feeling and style of a Cajun two-step, a form commonly used in the dance halls of southern Louisiana. Often, one can hear stylistic similarities to Scottish folk dances, and even the American Hoedown. A contrasting middle section is based on two very old pentatonic Cajun folksongs, Et ou c’est que tu es parti and Joe Ferail est un petit nègre.

Cajun Folk Songs II was commissioned by the Indiana All-State Band, and premiered by them in March 1997, conducted by Allan McMurray. The first movement is dedicated to the memory of my father, Frank P. Ticheli (March 6, 1934–June 20, 1996). The second movement was composed in celebration of the birth of my nephew, Ryan Paul Ticheli (b. August 18, 1996).

Down Longford Way

Down Longford Way is an Australian folk song that was collected by Katherine Parker. In 1912 Grainger met Parker and orchestrated and reworked the harmonies of Parker’s piano version of this tune.

—Leroy Osmon

Bayou Breakdown

Bayou Breakdown began as an attempt to write a fugue in the style of J.S. Bach. The main melody is introduced in a four-part fugue scored for woodwinds. A brief transition gives way to a second statement of the fugue by the brass. Another transition introduces a folk song-like lyrical theme based on a pentatonic scale. A brief transition takes the piece to its most dissonant section, evoking a poorly played waltz. The main melody attempts to reappear but is swept away by a progression of descending chromatic chords. After a complete stop, the initial fugue returns featuring solos by the clarinet, bassoon, alto saxophone, oboe, trumpet, and tuba. After a few short trio statements of the main tune, the piece ends with a polyphonic flurry from the full band.
