I Was Glad

I was glad when they said unto me: We will go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand in thy gates: O Jerusalem. Jerusalem is built as a city: that is at unity in itself. O Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls: and plenteousness within thy palaces.

Sir Hubert Parry’s I Was Glad is the most famous choral setting of Psalm 122. It has been programmed for every British coronation ceremony since 1902 when it was composed for the coronation of King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra. Originally sung by a 430-voice choir, accompanied by a 65-piece orchestra and ten trumpeters, it is a joyous, bombastic, and ultimately hopeful prayer for peace and “plenteousness” in the city of Jerusalem (and in the United Kingdom, in the context of a coronation ceremony). Two antiphonal choirs work in tandem to fill the performance space with a sound that can only be described as regal. The text is made up of the first, second, third, sixth and seventh verses from Psalm 122 as it appears in the 1662 Book of Common Prayer.

—John Carroll, baritone

Bar Xizam

Waiting, where is the harmony of your voice, so that, free from the desires of this life: I might rise? I am a dove from paradise, but out of this worldly cage: I shall rise. If, in your devotion, you call upon me to serve you, Then I promise, from the desires of life and this world: I will rise. O Lord, from the cloud of your grace, let your rain fall over and over, Before this, from the midst of it all, like a handful of dust: Let me rise. O rise up, with sweet gesture, and show me your stature: Lofty, like the cypress, So that, free from the desires of this life: I may rise. With dancing feet: I rise. With clapping hands: I rise. On the day that I die, in the span of a single breath, grant me but a glimpse of you, And then, like Hafez, free from the desires of life and this world: upward, I rise!

Set to the mystical text of the medieval Persian poet, Hafez, modern composer Abbie Betinis crafts a unique and thoughtfully structured composition in Bar Xizam. Humming in Shepard tones, the choir creates a mysterious and perpetual rising sensation, as soloists cry out above, “Bar Xizam!” The piece slowly expands from the murmurs of the caged and trapped, to cries of longing and desperation, and finally, a joyous celebration of freedom and ascension. A countless number of souls released, lifted, and freed.

A three-time cancer survivor, Abbie Betinis writes, “This piece is dedicated with much love to my parents, John & Emily Betinis, who continue to teach me, by their example, how to rise up.”

—Mandy Chen, alto

Agnus Dei

Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world, have mercy on us. Grant them rest, eternal, O Lord, and shine perpetual light upon them.

Gabriel Fauré’s grand Requiem first premiered as a shorter work in Paris at the cathedral La Madeleine, in 1888. He revised it up until 1901 when its final draft was premiered in the same beautiful church. The piece was not written for the death of anyone in particular; although his parents had both died prior to the work’s premiere. He had begun work on it before his mother’s death, and declared later that, “My requiem wasn’t written for anything—for pleasure, if you may call it that!” While not particularly religious, Fauré wrote, “Everything I managed to entertain by way of religious illusion I put into my requiem, which moreover is dominated from beginning to end by a very human feeling of faith in eternal rest.” In this movement, Fauré reiterates the opening theme of the entire work on the words Requiem aeternam, et lux perpetua luceat eis. He reminds us of the core prayer of the requiem, the prayer to the Lamb of God, that all of our departed loved ones may find eternal light and rest. It is important to mention that, in a departure from tradition, Fauré made a small but profoundly theological change in the second movement of his work, the Offertory; he truncates the line libera animas omnia fidelium defunctorum to simply libera animas defunctorum, which changes “deliver the souls of all the faithful departed” to “deliver the souls of all the departed.” This exemplifies the spirit of all of Fauré’s work and his entire musical philosophy—music should be free of bias or dogma, and it has the power to elevate the human soul beyond all boundaries of religion or nationality.

—Thomas Murphy O’Hara, tenor

THE PEACE OF WILD THINGS

When despair for the world grows in me and I wake in the night at the least sound in fear of what my life and my children’s lives may be, I go and lie down where the wood drake rests in his beauty on the water, and the great heron feeds. I come into the peace of wild things who do not tax their lives with forethought of grief. I come into the presence of still water. And I feel above me the day-blind stars waiting with their light. For a time I rest in the grace of the world, and am free.

Award-winning composer Jake Runestad holds a Master’s degree in composition from the Peabody Conservatory, John Hopkins University and has received numerous commissions from many notable ensembles and organizations. In this work, Runestad thoughtfully sets poetry by Wendell Berry (b. 1934) and reflects upon the darkness of the modern world and the healing properties of nature. The piece evokes a haunting atmosphere and beautifully highlights the desperation of modern life before surrendering to the serenity of the earth with a peaceful sigh.

—Sarah Conniff, soprano

HYMN TO THE CREATOR OF LIGHT

John Milford Rutter is a well-known and widely-performed composer of choral music. His carols and anthems are especially popular. He draws his texts from such eclectic sources as Gregorian Chant, African-American spirituals, Bach, and even The Beatles. Hymn to the Creator of Light is a unique divergence from Rutter’s characteristic style. It is written for unaccompanied double SATB choir, and is dedicated to the memory of Herbert Howells.

Howells was an influential 20th-century Anglican composer to whom Rutter was a good friend, and he includes several homages to Howells’ compositional style in the piece. He intended the anthem to be sung by the choirs at Gloucester Cathedral, for Howells was born in Gloucestershire and had studied with the Cathedral’s then-principal organist. In 1994, the work was premiered at the Three Choirs Festival during the installation of a new stained glass window in Howells’ honor.

Rutter selected two texts for the work: the first is from Lancelot Andrewes’ poem of praise, Glory Be to Thee, a private devotion he wrote in the course of his own prayers. It is an exultation in honor of God for creating both the visible light to see the world as well as the invisible light that each person has inside. The second is Johann Franck’s Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele (“Light, who dost my soul enlighten”), a hymn for the Eucharist set to a melody by Johan Crüger, which J.S. Bach then borrowed to use in his cantata of the same name (BWV 180).

The piece begins with a chant-like melody spread across three octaves from the second choir, and is joined by an ethereal response from the first choir. Both choirs then build chromatic, dissonant harmonies that are unstable and unpredictable, rapidly switching between different tonal centers and time signatures. The moody and anxious opening section develops until it is overtaken by an up-tempo chorus, which continues to oscillate between various meters and keys. As the chorus progresses, its driving motion slowly gives way to a beautiful, richly textured chorale based on the work of Crüger/Bach. This chorale setting is blended with subtle harmonies that include references to Howells, culminating in a thanksgiving to God and the light that leaves the listener with a deep sense of peace.

—Dorian Bonner, baritone

LET THY GOOD SPIRIT

Let thy good spirit lead me on a level path!
(Ps. 143:10)
Hallelujah!

Дух Твой Благий was written by Pavel Chesnokov to be sung as a communion hymn on Pentecost Sunday. This luxuriously sonorous, seven-voiced setting features concerted choirs of men and women pleading, over and over again, for divine intervention. In the middle section, the dense late Romantic harmony is reduced to an extraordinarily beautiful duet in the women's voices. The Chamber Choir will do its best to emulate the sound of the Leningrad-Rimsky-Korsakov Choir, which I heard on my first tour to Europe in 1989 as an undergraduate at Chapman University.

—Jonathan Talberg, conductor

The Last Words of David

He that ruleth over men must be just,
ruling in the fear of God.
And he shall be as the light of the morning,
when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds;
as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain.
Alleluia. Amen.

An American composer whose work spans most of the twentieth century, Randall Thompson is primarily known for his choral works and his efforts to reinvigorate the choral art in America. One can hear his sensitivity to text and rich harmonic language in The Last Words of David, his grand setting of II Samuel 23:3-4. Originally commissioned in 1949 for the Boston Symphony and Berkshire Music Festival chorus, one can hear the sweeping dynamics and pronounced articulation imploiring the presence of God in our leaders. Rising melodic and harmonic gestures signify a holy light piercing the clouds, and a solemn but stunning “alleluia” and “amen” coda, with what can be likened to church bells in the tenors, represent prayers and supplications for a just and fair ruler living “in the fear of God.” It is a sentiment many relate to even today, through all social, cultural, and religious differences.

—Morgan Davi, tenor

O Nata Lux

O Light born of Light, Jesus, redeemer of the world, with kindness deign to receive the praise and prayer of suppliants.
You who once deigned to be clothed in flesh for the sake of the lost, grant us to be made members of your blessed body.

O Nata Lux is the third of five movements from the choral work Lux Aeterna [Eternal Light] by LA-based composer, and national medal of honor winner, Morten Lauridsen. It was written during his time as Composer in Residence for the LA Master Chorale, and dedicated to his dear friend, and the director, Paul Salamunovich. It is set for chorus and chamber orchestra. O Nata Lux, however, is the sole a cappella movement of the work, and is often performed, as it is tonight, on its own. The text is an outpouring of hope and praise to Jesus—“light born of light”—and was drawn from sacred Latin sources. Lauridsen was greatly inspired by Gregorian chant in the setting of these texts. He worked with Salamunovich, an expert in Gregorian chant and Renaissance music, to build a flowing melodic landscape on the foundation of chant and Renaissance polyphony. In the documentary, Shining Night: A Portrait of Composer Morten Lauridsen, Salamunovich expresses, “Prayer is the lifting of the mind and heart to God, and I feel that this music is the perfect prayer.” There is truly a prayerful sentiment throughout the work, which is enhanced by the Gregorian interpretation of Lauridsen’s awe-inspiring melodic lines. Thus, O Nata Lux is a deeply moving journey of reflection, illumination, and hope.

—Kathleen Van Ruitten, soprano

Os Justi

The mouth of the righteous utters wisdom,
and his tongue speaks what is just.
The law of God is in his heart;
and his steps will not be impeded.
Alleluia

Os Justi was written by Anton Bruckner in 1879 during the height of the romantic era. The text is taken from Psalm 37:31-32, and can be thought of as a promise from God. Those who pursue righteousness and keep God as the focal point of their lives will find the road of their lives to be much less impeded upon.

Listen and hear the beautiful utterance of wisdom in the beginning, the conveyance of justice, the gradually overwhelming law that moves a heart, and the promise of freedom to go wherever you feel called in life.

—Jesse Tebay, baritone

Spirited Light

Antiphon for the Angels
by Hildegard von Bingen
trans. Barbara Newman

Spirited light! On the edge of the Presence your yearning burns in the secret darkness, O angels, insatiably into God’s gaze.

Perversity could not touch your beauty; you are essential joy.
But lost your companion, angel of the crooked wings.
He sought the summit, shot down the depths of God, and plummeted past Adam – that a mud-bound spirit might soar.

Composer and conductor Jake Runestad continues to grow in renown. His choral works are some of the most performed today, making him one of today’s most successful young composers. Spirited Light is a setting of a translated text by Hildegard von Bingen, a prolific female composer of the middle ages. In this text, von Bingen describes a vision she had about angels. She claimed this vision was a gift from the divine. Runestad uses several musical resources in order to compliment the text and create an image of the “broken angel,” or humanity, ascending to heaven. The “angel of crooked wings” plummets down to earth. This text-painting is represented by dissonant descending whole-tone scales with the interval of a tritone, perhaps serving as the manifestation of sin. Even with this dissonance the music and text paint an image of hope. This can be heard in the last line of the translated text, “That a mud-bound spirit might soar.” The imagery of an earthbound spirit rising to the heavens is represented by repeating thematic elements of rising scales in all voices. These changes in texture, and what often sound like shifts to new material, emulate Hildegard’s vision.

—Mason Allred, baritone
Lux Aurumque

Light, warm and heavy as pure gold,
and the angels sing softly to the new born babe.

Eric Whitacre’s Lux Aurumque has caught the attention of conductors, singers, and listeners from around the globe because of it’s mesmerizing texture, harmony and sound. The dissonant intervals carry a mixed emotional feel of wonder, awe, sorrow, and hope. Lux Aurumque was written in 1999 in Los Angeles and has been performed and recorded many times, including on the 2012 Grammy-winning album, Light and Gold. As you listen to our performance and interpretation of this piece, I hope you will let us move you into the shimmering glow of the tight harmonies, thoughts of the beauty of life, and the art of light made sound.
