General Overview

The council spent a significant part of the academic year developing a new policy on “Academic Progress Rules.” The rules set criteria and standards for departments wishing to establish timelines that students must meet to stay on track to their degrees. It also gives greater authority to departments to dismiss students from majors when they are not making adequate progress while ensuring that the rights of the students are not infringed. This policy was submitted to the senate for consideration in 2011-12.

We completed review of the General Education policy changes proposed by GEGC with a split recommendation on the issue of whether students should take both a biological and a physical science lab course.

We reviewed a large number of discontinuance and new program requests accepting most. A request for a new minor in Construction Engineering Management was eventually withdrawn after considerable discussion. The main issue was that the minor was intended only for Civil Engineering majors which is contrary to the normal standard of minors being open to all students.

Unfinished Business

The senate returned the policy on masters’ degrees to the council with recommendations for reconsideration in several areas. The council made several changes but the issue of second masters’ degrees was left open for consideration in fall 2011. The primary issue is whether to freely permit, permit in limited situations, or forbid except in the case of approved programs, students to pursue two masters’ degrees simultaneously.

We began discussion on changes to the Discontinuance policy, particularly how to handle program suspensions; we anticipate sending a revised policy to the senate in fall 2011.
