OFFICE OF THE ACADEMIC SENATE

September 20, 1999

Colleagues,

Our annual Academic Senate Retreat on September 30th will feature two topics of considerable importance for our future as a university.

The morning session will focus on international education as a part of our "global future". The program designed by the International Education Committee will provide an opportunity to discuss a wide range of topics relating to international education, e.g., opportunities for faculty and students to study abroad, internationalizing our curriculum, etc. This will be an excellent opportunity for the campus community to get better acquainted with our expanding efforts in the area of international education.

The afternoon session will be devoted to a "conversation about enrollment". The long-predicted "tidal wave" of students is now arriving on our campus. It is now time for us to begin to discuss how we will deal with expanded enrollments while maintaining educational quality and enhancing student success. This part of the program will be a real conversation. We have asked President Maxson to begin the discussion and we hope that all parts of the university community will join in to share their perspectives on this critical issue.

We hope that you will be able to attend and participate in the discussions of these important issues.

Sincerely yours,
