Chatino Sign Language (A language of Mexico)

- Location: is an emerging village sign language of the indigenous Chatino villages of San Juan Quiahije and Cieneguilla in Oaxaca, Mexico, used by both the deaf and some of the hearing population.
- About: It is apparently unrelated to Mexican Sign Language. As of 2014, there is a National Science Foundation-funded study of the development of this language. Non-signing hearing people in the village use various gestures for negation when speaking, and these are retained in Chatino Sign Language. The variability of these signs may be due to the small size of the deaf population in comparison to the number of hearing people who use them as co-speech gestures.

Related Reading

Hou, Lynn Yong-Shi

2014 Language Development and Socialization of Deaf Children in a Chatino Village. http://grantome.com/grant/NIH/F31-DC013972-01

Hou, Lynn

2013 Negation in Chatino Sign. https://www.ucl.ac.uk/dcal/tislr/abstracts/tislr11_submission_266.pdf

Last Updated: May 14, 2015