When people say that Chinese has no grammar, they usually mean that it is not inflected for case, number, person, tense, and so forth. But inflection is not the only kind of grammar. … Chinese does have grammar. This grammar is very different from that of languages with what is traditionally called inflection. …it is just as complex and just as regularly defined. (Ramsey, 1987, p. 57)